

Garcia Ramirez et al. v. U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement et al.

Frequently Asked Questions¹

Updated February 2025

The Garcia Ramirez v. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) class action challenged ICE's routine practice during the first Trump administration of detaining unaccompanied immigrant youth when they turned 18 instead of considering and placing youth in the least restrictive setting available. The court issued a permanent injunction and mandated affirmative obligations for ICE until September 20, 2026. With the start of a second Trump administration, class counsel is concerned we may see violations of the permanent injunction, so we are reissuing this FAQs practice advisory to refresh practitioners regarding the injunction's protections.

If you believe ICE has wrongfully detained a youth who has aged out of the Department of Health and Human Services' (HHS's) Office of Refugee Resettlement (ORR) custody, contact class counsel for assistance at clearinghouse@immcouncil.org or at litigation@immigrantjustice.org. Practitioners may also consider filing a petition for habeas corpus in district court if there is evidence that ICE failed to consider the least restrictive setting available.

Overview of Garcia Ramirez v. ICE

Garcia Ramirez v. Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) is a nationwide class action lawsuit in the District Court for the District of Columbia challenging the practice of transferring children who arrive in the United States without parents or legal guardians from ORR custody to ICE-contracted jails and prisons on their 18th birthdays, without considering less restrictive placements.

In July 2020, following more than two years of litigation culminating in an 18-day bench trial, the court ruled that ICE's failure to consider less restrictive settings before transferring unaccompanied immigrant youth to ICE detention violates U.S. immigration laws. In its ruling, the district court found that the U.S. government routinely and systematically fails to adhere to the statutory provisions that require it to consider placement in the least restrictive setting available, and to provide meaningful alternatives to detention as required by amendments to the Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act (TVPRA).

Following the ruling, ICE issued new directives and training to its officers. Since the court's ruling, ICE has released the vast majority of young people on their own recognizance after they turn 18 in ORR custody.

In September 2021, the court issued a permanent injunction in the case barring ICE from violating the TVPRA as described in the court's accompanying opinion and setting forth a series of affirmative obligations. The court amended the injunction in November 2021 to clarify the length of time ICE has to comply with the affirmative obligations. In its accompanying memorandum opinion, the court pointed to ICE's "pervasive violations" of the TVPRA and explained that its decision to grant injunctive relief was in part based on ICE's failure to comply with the statute, which constituted "a pattern of agency recalcitrance and resistance to the fulfillment of its legal duties."²

The Court's decision made clear that ICE must comply substantively with the TVPRA, which requires ICE to consider placing unaccompanied immigrant children who age out of ORR custody in settings less restrictive than ICE detention. In addition, as part of the permanent injunction, for five years—until September 20, 2026—ICE must:

- Re-train its officers and revise its policies and handbook on how to make custody determinations when youth in ORR custody turn 18;
- Document its custody decisions on an "Age-Out Review Worksheet"; and
- Provide Age-Out Review Worksheets and monthly reports to class counsel.

These FAQs are intended to guide legal representatives on the meaning of the Garcia Ramirez decision when representing unaccompanied children in ORR custody who are approaching their 18th birthdays, or those who have already turned 18 and were transferred from ORR custody to ICE detention. These FAQs also incorporate best practices learned throughout the course of litigating this class action.

FAQs Regarding Custody Determinations for Youth Aging Out of ORR Custody

1. Q: What does the court's decision mean?

A: The decision means that unaccompanied children who turn 18 and "age out" of ORR custody should generally not be transferred to ICE detention unless there is evidence that they are a flight risk, danger to themselves, or danger to the community, and that release, including release on an Alternative to Detention (ATD) program, would not mitigate these concerns.

2. Q: What can I do to do prepare for my client's 18th birthday?

A: Remain in touch with shelter and ORR staff regarding the child's potential reunification options, including any sponsors who were denied or who did not complete the family reunification process, and whether release is likely to happen before age-out. If the child does not have a sponsor, it is helpful to secure placement at a post-18 shelter and obtain a letter from the shelter confirming placement. This letter can be included in a post-18 plan or request for release to ICE.

3. Q: What is a post-18 plan?

A: A post-18 plan is information sent to ICE in preparation for a child's 18th birthday. It should contain information about the child's potential sponsors or placement options once they turn 18. This information is usually sent to ICE by the child's ORR shelter case manager, but attorneys and other representatives can also submit post-18 plans to ICE.

4. Q: What is the National Age-Out Shelter List?

A: The National Age-Out Shelter List is a list of shelters and post-18 placements to which ICE can release young people aging out of ORR custody. ICE currently does not make the shelter list publicly available. If a youth does not have a proposed sponsor, the ICE Field Office Juvenile Coordinator (FOJC) must reach out to at least five shelters from the list to attempt to find a post-18 placement. See ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 66.³

5. Q: My client is unlikely to be released by ORR before they turn 18. What should I do if ORR/the shelter has not prepared a post-18 plan?

A: ICE should not rely on a lack of a post-18 plan as a reason for detention.⁴ ICE should reach out to ORR or shelter staff to request a post-18 plan if one is not provided. ICE should also take into account potential sponsors who are suggested by the child's attorney, their Child Advocate from the Young Center for Immigrant Children's Rights (if one is appointed to them), or another representative. Practitioners are encouraged to submit a post-18 plan or request for release to ICE. See Appendix A, Sample Release Request. However, even if a post-18 plan is not provided by ORR or the child's attorney or representative, ICE is required to identify the least restrictive setting available and consider alternatives to detention. ⁴ See Liability Order at 143-44, 75 ("It stands to reason that ORR and third parties may have seen no reason to waste time submitting post-18 plans to offices that would detain all their age-outs regardless. If a causal relationship exists between submission of post-18 plans and detention rates, it strikes the Court that this causal relationship may plausibly run in either direction."); ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 66 ("Remember: ICE cannot rely solely on sponsorship decisions by ORR or the absence of sponsor information from ORR as a reason to short-circuit the VAWA 2013 inquiry and detain.").

List to see if they will accept the young person. See ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 66, 28-29 (slides 27-28), 33-34 (slides 32-33).

6. Q: Who makes the Age-Out custody determination decision?

A: The ICE Field Office Juvenile Coordinator (FOJC) typically makes the Age-Out custody determination decision. Among the FOJC's duties are to serve unaccompanied children with Notices to Appear (NTAs) and monitor the UC Portal for upcoming Age-Outs. The FOJC's custody determination is then reviewed by the Supervisory Detention and Deportation Officer (SDDO). ICE's Juvenile and Family Residential Management Unit (JFRMU) – an ICE headquarters unit – reviews any decision to detain a child aging out of ORR custody. See Liability Order at 20-21 (discussing ICE structure); ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 46 (slide 45).

7. Q: When do FOJCs begin planning to make an Age-Out custody determination?

A: According to training FOJCs currently receive, they should begin their work at least two weeks in advance of the child's 18th birthday, if possible. See ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 17 (slide 16), 44 (slide 43). We understand that typically these decisions are made the day (or night) before the child's birthday, or even on the 18th birthday. Practitioners are encouraged to contact the FOJC in advance of the child's 18th birthday to check on the status of the child's custody determination.

8. Q: What information does ORR share with ICE when a child is about to turn 18?

A: ORR is not a party to Garcia Ramirez, so there are no specific requirements stemming out of the litigation regarding what information they must share with ICE before a child turns 18. However, ORR's policies⁵ require ORR to engage in post-18 planning. This typically means that ORR will share information with ICE regarding the child's potential sponsors, possibilities for release, and whether the child may be a flight risk or danger to themselves or others. The amount of information ORR shares with ICE depends on the particular shelter.

9. Q: What is the Age-Out Review Worksheet?

A: The Age-Out Review Worksheet (AORW) is a form the FOJC must fill out for each young person nearing their 18th birthday. The form asks the FOJC to identify any potential sponsors or post-18 placements for the youth. It also includes an assessment of whether the person aging out is a flight risk, danger to self, or danger to the community.

10. Q: Does ICE use the Risk Classification Assessment (RCA) Tool when determining whether to detain a young person aging out?

A: No. Under the Garcia Ramirez decision, it is not appropriate for ICE to utilize the RCA tool when determining whether to detain a young person about to turn 18. Following the court's decision, ICE issued a directive to the field regarding the RCA tool and when it may and may not be used. ICE may only run the RCA tool after it has decided to detain a young person aging out of ORR custody. See also Question 30, infra.

Identifying Potential Sponsors

11. Q: If ORR has denied an individual sponsor or found them not viable, can ICE still release my client to that sponsor?

A: Yes, ORR has sponsorship requirements for unaccompanied children in their care that are not applicable to young people aging out of the ORR system. Liability Order at 173–75. ICE cannot deny a sponsor solely because ORR did so. See ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 15 (slide 14).

12. Q: If ORR has not been able to verify the sponsor’s relationship to my client, can ICE still consider this sponsor?

A: Yes, the sponsor does not need to be related to or have a prior relationship with the young person who ages out for ICE to consider them. ORR’s sponsorship requirements for unaccompanied children are not applicable for young people aging out of the ORR system. Liability Order at 173-75.

13. Q: The sponsor was unable or unwilling to be fingerprinted by ORR. Can ICE still consider this sponsor?

A: Yes, fingerprints are not a requirement for ICE to consider a sponsor. Liability Order at 75-76. Fingerprinting is an ORR sponsorship requirement for unaccompanied children that is not applicable to young people aging out.

14. Q: My client’s sponsor is not a U.S. citizen or lawful permanent resident. Can ICE still consider this sponsor?

A: Yes, lawful status is not necessary for sponsorship of young people aging out of ORR custody. Liability Order at 77-78; ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 16 (slide 15). We understand that certain ICE field offices imposed this requirement in the past, but they should no longer do so under the Garcia Ramirez decision. However, it is important to note that potential sponsors, especially undocumented ones, may be hesitant to receive a young person aging out of ORR custody because it requires them to provide their name, address, and phone number to ICE (through you as the child’s attorney, or through the ORR shelter staff who are working up the post-18 plan to submit to ICE). Practitioners should be mindful of this when speaking to their clients and potential sponsors: it is important to ask sponsors whether or not they have already provided their information to the ORR shelter staff and/or whether they already have an immigration case themselves and what the status of that case is, so as to properly advise your client and/or the sponsor regarding the risk of immigration enforcement involved in sponsorship.

Flight Risk Concerns

15. Q: My client lacks a fixed or permanent address in the United States. Are they automatically a flight risk?

A: No, most unaccompanied children lack a fixed or permanent address in the United States because they are recent arrivals to the country and have been housed in ORR custody. This alone does not constitute a flight risk. Though ICE requires a fixed or permanent U.S. address when releasing adults, custody determinations for children aging out cannot be made under the same standards used for adults. See ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 12, 14 (slides 11, 13).

16. Q: My client has been in ORR custody for an extended period of time. Can ICE detain them based on this?

A: No, length of stay in ORR custody is not a relevant factor for Age-Out custody determinations. Long length of stay does not indicate that the young person lacks a viable sponsor, as ORR's sponsorship requirements are not applicable to sponsors considered by ICE. Liability Order at 53, 172. Moreover, youth with long lengths of stay in ORR custody may be awaiting placement in ORR's long-term foster care programs or already in foster care. Youth in foster care have already demonstrated an ability to live in the community, and ICE should generally not detain them. Id. at 53.

17. Q: My client ran away or attempted to run away (a.k.a. "abscond") from ORR custody. Are they a flight risk?

A: Not necessarily. See ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 58-60 (slides 57-58). In those cases, practitioners should make sure to emphasize any mitigating factors in their client's case, such as:

- What were the circumstances that led to the child's attempt to run away?
- Has the young person demonstrated good behavior in ORR custody since the attempt to run away?
- Was the attempt linked to mental health issues for which they are now being treated?
- Are they eligible for immigration relief and/or do they have an application for relief on file? See Liability Order at 54.
- Are there any other mitigating factors, such as a sponsor who will ensure attendance at future immigration hearings? Id.

18. Q: My client has been accepted into a post-18 shelter or group home but has family in the United States. Can ICE consider this a flight risk factor?

A: No, having family in the United States is a positive factor that indicates ties to the community. See ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 42. The fact that your client has not reunified with these family members does not indicate that they will fail to comply with future immigration obligations. In the past, some ICE field offices considered this a flight risk factor for youth who planned to go to post-18 shelters, but doing so is not appropriate under the Garcia Ramirez decision.

Danger to Self

19. Q: My client has a history of mental health concerns or self-harm. Will ICE find that they are a danger to themselves?

A: Young people aging out should not be detained simply because of mental health concerns or self-harm. See ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 16 (slide 15), 70 (slide 64). In determining the least restrictive setting available for a youth with mental health concerns and a history of self-harm, ICE should evaluate whether the non-detention setting will mitigate any potential safety concerns. Id. They should assess whether there is a release plan in place that outlines services the young person could access if released. Id. They should also consider the recency of any self-harm incidents. Id.

20. Q: A post-18 shelter or group home is available to house my client. Can ICE detain them because of concerns that they will be a danger to themselves because they will be at risk of homelessness?

A: No, according to ICE training materials, it is not appropriate for ICE to find that a young person is a danger to themselves in this situation. See ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 16 (slide 15).

21. Q: Does the fact that the young person aging out is unable to support themselves make them a danger to themselves?

A: No, it is not appropriate for ICE to find that inability to support oneself renders a young person aging out a danger to themselves. See ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 16 (slide 15).

Danger to Others

22. Q: My client has been arrested, has a history of juvenile delinquency, or a criminal history. Will ICE find that they are a danger to the community?

A: Not necessarily. ICE should consider mitigating factors when determining whether the young person is a danger to the community and in determining the least restrictive setting available. See ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 22-23 (slides 21-22). Practitioners are encouraged to emphasize the following factors in their client's release request:

- The circumstances of the arrest/juvenile delinquency/criminal history and the lack of violence against others. When discussing the circumstances of these types of events in the youth's history, make sure to consider whether what you include in the release request might prejudice the client's immigration case going forward. It is important to find an appropriate balance between the amount of information you provide and the need to mitigate any adverse factors.

- The recency of the arrest and their client's age at the time.
- Evidence of good behavior while in ORR custody.
- Any other mitigating factors, such as a supportive sponsor or group home environment.
- In some situations, ICE may want to interview your client to assess risk of danger. Attorneys should request that ORR and/or ICE keep them apprised of any such interview so that the attorney can be present and the young person knows what to expect.
- If your client has admitted to or been arrested/charged/convicted for an offense listed in Section 2 of the Laken Riley Act⁶, which became law on January 29, 2025, ICE may infer that they are a danger to the community. In such a case, you will need to build a robust post-18 plan that outlines why the offense is not an indicia of dangerousness.

23. Q: My client is detained at a staff-secure or secure ORR shelter. Is this a sufficient reason for ICE to detain them?

A: No, ORR shelter level/security is not a sufficient reason for ICE to detain a young person aging out. ICE should look to the individual factors of the person's case and the circumstances or reasons for placement in a staff-secure or secure shelter. Practitioners are encouraged to submit evidence of mitigating factors in cases where the young person may present behavioral concerns.

24. Q: My client has significant incident reports (SIRs) from their time in ORR custody. Is this a sufficient reason for ICE to detain them?

A: No, SIRs alone are not a reason for ICE to detain. See Liability Order at 29 n.9. Like with ORR shelter level/security, ICE should look to the individual factors of the person's case and the circumstances of the SIRs. Practitioners are encouraged to submit evidence of mitigating factors in cases where the young person may present behavioral concerns.

⁶ The offenses listed in Section 2 of the Laken Riley Act are: burglary (this usually means breaking and entering with the intention of committing a crime inside, but it can vary based on state laws); theft or larceny (this usually means stealing or taking someone's property without permission, but it can vary based on state laws); shoplifting (this usually means a type of theft or larceny committed against retail stores but it can vary based on state laws); assault of a law enforcement officer; any crime that results in death or serious bodily injury to another person. Admitting to, or being arrested/charged/convicted for, these offenses now requires mandatory ICE detention for people who entered the U.S. without permission (as unaccompanied children most frequently do) under the Laken Riley Act as incorporated into the INA.

Release Options

25. Q: When is it appropriate for ICE to release a young person aging out of ORR custody on their own recognizance (OREC)?

A: OREC may be the least restrictive setting available when the young person has no final order of removal. See Liability Order at 159-61. OREC is the appropriate release option for most young people who do not present a significant danger to others after consideration of any mitigating factors. Id.

26. Q: My client has a removal order. Can they be released when they turn 18?

A: Yes, ICE may release your client on an Order of Supervision (OSUP) if they have an existing order of removal. The Garcia Ramirez decision states that OSUP is an appropriate release option for young people aging out who have removal orders. Liability Order at 23, 160-61.

27. Q: In what situations should my client be released under the ATD program?

A: ICE's ATD program is largely surveillance-based and includes a spectrum of reporting and surveillance obligations, include tracking by ankle monitor or by smartphone application, or telephonic reporting. Liability Order at 24. ATD programs are operational throughout the country. Id. ATD should only be used in situations where significant flight risk concerns may warrant additional supervision and after consideration of mitigating factors. See ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 8 (slide 7), 59-60 (slide 58).

28. Q: May ICE release a young person aging out of ORR custody to a sponsor (individual or organizational) that is outside their current Area of Responsibility (AOR)?

A: Yes, a young person may be released to a sponsor anywhere in the United States, even if the sponsor is located outside of the ICE field office's AOR. See ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 66.

Detention

29. Q: ICE has decided to detain my client. How do they determine the level of security in which to place them?

A: ICE should run the RCA tool after determining to detain your client because the RCA tool always recommends detention. ICE may only utilize the RCA for the limited purpose of determining the level of detention (e.g., low, medium, high). See ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 13 (slide 12).

30. Q: If the ICE FOJC decides to detain my client, is there any additional level of review?

A: Any case where the FOJC decides to detain a youth who has aged out of ORR custody will require JFRMU concurrence prior to detention. See ICE Age-Out Training PowerPoint at 46 (slide 45). The FOJC must contact JFRMU by email to discuss the case and provide information and records regarding your client.

31. Q: I believe ICE has wrongfully decided to detain my client. What should I do?

A: If you have not already done so, practitioners are encouraged to contact the FOJC who made the decision as soon as possible to attempt to obtain information about the basis for the decision. If there is mitigating evidence available, this should be sent to the FOJC with a request that the young person be released and an explanation as to why they are neither a flight risk nor a danger to self or to others. To the extent your client may have some history indicating flight risk or danger to self or others, practitioners should explain or submit evidence to show that such concerns can be mitigated by a non-detention placement. It is advisable to contact the FOJC before the custody determination is made, particularly if your client presents any potential factors that could lead ICE to find them to be a flight risk, danger to self, or danger to others. For a sample Age-Out custody determination release request, please see the attached appendix.

If you believe ICE has wrongfully detained a youth who has aged out of ORR custody, contact class counsel for assistance at clearinghouse@immcouncil.org or at litigation@immigrantjustice.org. Practitioners may also consider filing a petition for habeas corpus in district court if there is evidence that ICE failed to consider the least restrictive setting available.
